Problem to Find Supplies.

The greatest problem that faces the war department is to find supplies for the steadily moving host of national guardsmen which moves to its mobiliaring that week to the number of 70,000. On Jure 25th the First and Second regiments of the Connecticut National Guard were approximately 1.

300 short of their required war strength and on that date it was still necessary for Connecticut to furnish 1.234 men, as volunteers for the regular army of the United States. June 30th is the last day on which enlistments in the national guard or regular army will count toward reducing the quota to be assigned to Connecticut

Now, theregore, by virtue of the authority vested in me. I call the men of Connecticut who may be eligible to present themselves on the 30th day of June, 1917, for the purpose of volunteering in either the national guard of Connecticut or the regular army, proving that Connecticut may fulfill the obligations imposed upon her.
